Indianapolis, IN (February 17, 2014) — The Indiana Association of Chiefs of Police (IACP) is pleased to announce that Chief Anthony Ciriello of the Syracuse Police Department will serve as IACP President in 2014.

"The IACP is a very strong professional organization made up of some of the most qualified leaders in our state. As president of this prestigious organization, I am truly humbled to be entrusted with the confidence of my peers to lead the association, to represent chief's statewide and to be placed in a position that many great chief's have stood before me," stated Ciriello. "I look forward to my tenure as president to continue to make the IACP a voice to be reckoned with, to provide second to none training opportunities and to solidify that the IACP is one of the best leadership organizations in the country."

Ciriello has been a law enforcement officer for 32 years. Prior to being Chief of the Syracuse Police Department, Ciriello was an arson investigator for the state of Indiana and officer of Kosciusko County Sheriff's Department.

Ciriello also holds a certification as a Medicolegal Death Investigator and is a certified Infant Death Investigator/Instructor through the Center for Disease Control (CDC). He uses these specialized skills while serving as the Indiana coordinator for the U.S. Department of Justice "NAMUS" Project, which helps identify unidentified human remains.

Outside of his law enforcement career, Ciriello serves as Vice President of the Kosciusko County Shrine Club and is the Shrine Circus Chairman.
